

CIT was again the venue for this years Munster Secondary Schools championship with the opportunity of a place on the starting list of the National Championships at stake. The age group differences at schools level throws many athletes up against new competition they would not meet at clubs level and many of the countries top rugby schools, such as Belvedere in Dublin or Rockwell, often enlist their players in to track and field during the rugby off-season; it was at Schools level that Irish international Cian Healy began his brief athletics career. This is a competition steeped in tradition which sets it aside from club competition and qualification from the Munster's is never easy.
